Groton holds Community Good Friday Service

Sierra Tunby and Krista Geiger (on piano) provided special music.

The Groton Community Good Friday service was held Friday evening at the United Methodist Church in Groton. Attendance was way up compared to last year's 12 that attended the service during noon hour with an estimated 50 attending from four different churches. An offering was gathered which will be used for the Groton Community Crisis Fund. Members from the United Methodist Church, Groton Christian & Missionary Alliance Church and Heaven Bound Ministries of Pierpont participated in the services.

Rick Buhler portrayed Jesus and placed a crown of thorns on the cross at the end of the service.

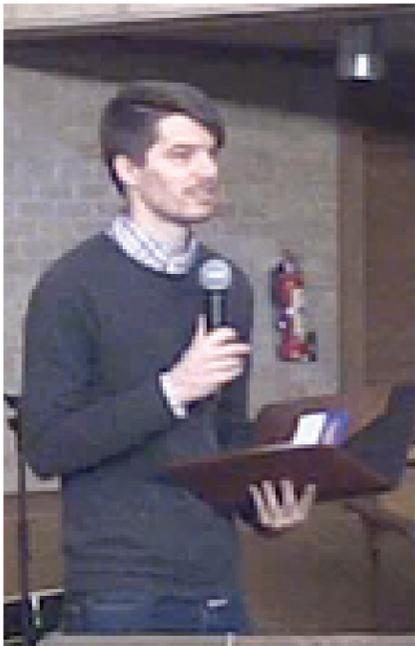

Kim Weber pounds in a nail in the cross after she did her reading.

Photos are lifted from the GDIVLIVE.COM video, which is archived at 397news.com where GDI subscribers will have access.

Michelle Riedl did one of the readings.

Pastor Brandon Dunham of the United Methodist Church gave the opening remarks.

The congregation came to the cross after the service and each person had the opportunity to pound a nail into the cross.

Lane Tietz did a reading.

Pastor Josh Jetto of the Groton Christian & Missionary Alliance Church gave the closing remarks.

Questions & Answers About Our Environment

Dear EarthTalk: Do all the Democratic contenders for President in 2020 agree on the need to battle climate change? Which ones have demonstrated the most leadership on environmental issues?

-- Joe Bradley, Minneapolis, MN

With 18 Democrats already declared as running for president in 2020 (Pete Buttigieg, Eric Swalwell, Tim Ryan, Kristen Gillibrand, Beto O'Rourke, John Hickenlooper, Jay Inslee, Bernie Sanders, Amy Klobuchar, Elizabeth Warren, Cory Booker, Kamala Harris, Julian Castro, Tulsi Gabbard, John Delaney, Wayne Messam, Marianne Williamson and Andrew Yang), and several more likely to officially join the fray, there is no shortage of ideas on ways to beat Donald Trump. Besides their common desire to unseat Trump, all of these White House hopefuls agree on the need to address climate change before it's too late.

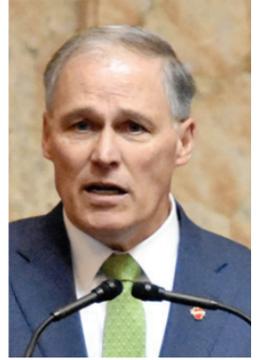

A recent New York Times survey of the field found that each candidate favors bringing back Obama-era regulations designed to curb power plant and automotive emissions and curtail coal leasing on federal lands. Likewise, all 18 say the U.S. should recommit to the Paris climate agreement despite Trump's efforts to pull out. But less than half (Castro, Gabbard, Gillibrand, Hickenlooper, Inslee, O'Rourke, Sanders, Warren and Williamson) are for even stronger new regulations to push us further faster on transitioning to a green economy.

Meanwhile, the non-profit 350 Action recently published the results of its 2020 Climate Test, a scorecard rating each candidate's climate cred based on whether they support the Green New Deal or similar legislation, have taken actions to keep fossil fuels in the ground, and have pledged to refuse campaign financing from petrochemical interests. Gillibrand, Inslee, Sanders, Swalwell, Warren and Williamson scored 3/3 on the test, while Booker, Buttigieg, Gabbard and Yang each scored 2/3. (Delaney and Hickenlooper failed all three tests, despite acknowledging that climate change is a serious issue.)

Perhaps the candidate with the most climate skin in the game is Washington governor Jay Inslee, who has declared solving the climate crisis the primary focus of his White House bid. His 2007 book Apollo's Fire: Igniting America's Clean Energy Economy laid out a plan for solving the climate crisis via a rapid transition to renewable energy sources with massive investments in clean energy jobs that would benefit Americans from all walks of life—much like the Green New Deal proposal released earlier this year by New York Congresswoman Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez. Harris, Booker, Gillibrand, Sanders and Warren each served as co-sponsors for the Green New Deal's introduction in the Senate.

Warren, a longtime sympathizer with environmental causes, recently released her plan to boost renewable energy production and protect public lands if she becomes president. The crux of her proposal calls for banning the extraction of fossil fuels on public lands (and offshore in domestic waters) and replacing it with renewable energy production so as to meet 10 percent of the nation's overall electricity supply.

If any of the Democrats can take control of the White House in 2020, environmental advocates will no doubt breathe a sigh of relief.

Washington State's governor Jay Inslee, one of the first Democrats to declare his candidacy for the White House in 2020, aims to make climate change a central issue in the 2020 election.

Taking the Cure for Sleep Apnea

Mr. S had gained some weight. His wife noted his snoring was getting worse and he was having spells when he would stop breathing during sleep. She informed his doctor who prescribed a home overnight oximetry test. This home test showed Mr. S's oxygen levels were dropping dangerously low during much of night. The subsequent full sleep study indicated he would benefit from a continuous positive airway pressure or CPAP device. Five years later, the patient died from a heart attack, and the doctor found out that the CPAP machine stayed under his bed and was rarely, if ever, used. One study showed, despite its benefits, only 30 percent of those prescribed CPAP will actually use it.

An estimated 22 million Americans suffer from sleep apnea and the majority don't know they have it. Their sleep is interrupted by snoring, choking and prolonged spells of low oxygen levels. Their days are troubled by fatigue, sleepiness, often abnormal heart rhythms and heart failure. Their risk of stroke over five years is two to three times higher than usual and risk of all-cause premature death three to five times higher. One estimate is that 38,000 annual deaths in the U.S. will occur from heart disease due to untreated sleep apnea.

Making the diagnosis is challenging. In 2016, we gave a standardized questionnaire to screen for sleep apnea to 67 people who were 70-years-old or older. Following that, we tested all 67 with home overnight oximetry. Of the 67 tested, 42 percent were normal, 31 percent had mild sleep apnea and 26 percent had moderate to severe sleep apnea. Conclusions from my study were that in this older age group, the commonly used screening questionnaires for sleep apnea misses the diagnosis half the time, about one out of four have life-threatening sleep apnea and, in this older population, women and men are equally burdened by this condition.

Anyone with heart disease, high blood pressure, obesity, a history of heavy snoring or observed spells of apnea (and maybe anyone reaching 70) would benefit from a home overnight oximetry test and, if this test is abnormal, from a full sleep study. If CPAP is prescribed, it would be wise for that individual to make every effort to use the CPAP device, knowing that this non-medicinal therapy reduces death rate by three to five times.

Many premature deaths, especially from heart disease, could be prevented by first discovering the diagnosis of sleep apnea and then, when apropos, by taking the CPAP cure.

ATVs more common on SD roadways where risk of death is greater

By: Bart Pfankuch

This story was produced by South Dakota News Watch, a non-profit news organization. Find more in-depth reporting at www.sdnews-watch.org.

The number of all-terrain vehicles registered for road use in South Dakota has risen dramatically in recent years, even as a growing body of research shows that ATVs are more dangerous and deadly on roadways than in off-road areas.

ATVs certified as legal to drive on South Dakota roads more than doubled in the past decade, from 17,913 registered in 2009 to 38,377 registered in 2018. That 114 percent increase compares to a 17 percent increase in the overall number of cars, trucks and other vehicles registered during that time span, according to the state Department of Revenue.

A national study of fatal ATV crashes over a 25-year period by the journal Injury Prevention showed that more than 60 percent of deaths occurred during on-road use, even though ATVs are driven far more frequently in off-road settings.

A separate study by the journal Traffic Injury Prevention showed that over the past 20 years, ATV-related deaths increased at twice the rate on paved roadways compared to off-road surfaces.

Manufacturers of ATVs tell dealers and buyers that the machines are not designed for on-road use, and many contain warning tags recommending off-road use only. A major non-profit ATV industry group, the Specialty Vehicle Institute of America, also opposes on-road use of ATVs.

Yet South Dakota laws treat ATVs much the same as motorcycles when it comes to licensing and riding legally.

ATVs are a general category of off-road vehicles that includes single-rider machines with handlebars and a straddle seat and Utility Terrain Vehicles (UTVs), which are two-person, bucket-seat models also called side-by-sides. Larger, multi-passenger Recreational Off-road Vehicles (ROVs) are a recent entry into the market.

All are legal to ride on roads and highways in South Dakota except for interstates. The vehicles must be licensed by the state and have basic safety components such as a horn, rear-view mirror, headlights and brake lights before becoming road legal. South Dakota is one of 36 states that allow on-road ATV use in some form, and its laws are among the least restrictive in the nation.

Experts point to the basic design of ATVs, which are made to traverse trails or bumpy terrain and make tight turns around objects, as one reason they are more dangerous on paved or unpaved roads. Also, experts say small, low-pressure tires, a high center of gravity and speeds that can now reach up to 80 mph make ATVs prone to rollovers. ATVs also can collide with much larger, heavier cars and trucks when used on roads.

"It's a vehicle not designed for roadways," said Dr. Charles Jennissen, a pediatric emergency physician at the University of Iowa Hospital who studies ATV accidents. "You have basically a vehicle that when it is on the roadway, it is being misused. If you're traveling on a roadway, it's never going to be safe when used that way."

Recent research also shows ATV drivers tend to employ riskier behaviors when traveling on roadways, such as not wearing a helmet, being under the influence of alcohol, riding too fast for conditions or carrying passengers unsafely.

ATVs have become extremely popular, with sales tripling between 1995 and 2005; about 45,000 are now sold in the U.S. each year. Riders say they enjoy ATVs for the freedom of the open air, ability to traverse a variety of surfaces and to travel to places passenger vehicles cannot.

Like any mode of transportation, ATV use includes some inherent risk.

Since 1982, about 15,250 people have died in ATV-related accidents in the United States and more than 100,000 people have been injured (those figures do not include data on ROVs.)

South Dakota, the 46th most populous state, was 38th in ATV-related deaths from 1982-2013 with 86 fatalities, according to the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission. Over the past five years, the state has seen 14 fatalities in ATV or UTV accidents, several of them on roadways, according to the state Department of Public Safety.

The incongruity between state law and manufacturer recommendations puts powersports dealers in a tough spot. Representatives of three South Dakota dealerships interviewed by News Watch had strong feelings on ATV use and safety, but all three declined to have their names or the names of their dealerships published.

One veteran South Dakota law enforcement officer said drivers should apply the same caution and common sense to ATV use that they would with any motor vehicle.

South Dakota Highway Patrol Capt. Jason Husby, who trains other officers on motor vehicle laws, said people who ride ATVs on the road must be aware of the limitations of the vehicles and the risks they face when riding.

"It's not as safe as a passenger car, and you don't get the maneuverability of a motorcycle," said Husby, who drives cars, motorcycles and ATVs. "But a lot of this really comes down to the fact that it's not what you drive, it's how you drive it."

A man and woman took their Utility Terrain Vehicle on a ride through a Summerset neighborhood and business park on a recent day. Recent studies show that ATVs and UTVs are designed specifically for off-road use and are less safe on paved and unpaved roads. Photo: Bart Pfankuch

Freedom and accessibility

Scott Wittrock of Hartford loves to ride ATVs because they provide him and his sons the freedom to explore places that are inaccessible to cars or trucks.

Whether on organized group trail rides or while hunting in the Black Hills, driving ATVs is both fun and practical for Wittrock.

"For me, I like being able to get back in nature a little bit, and I love coming out in the Black Hills and getting to places other people can't get to," he said.

Wittrock serves as president of the South Dakota ATV/UTV Association, which monitors legislation related to ATVs and lobbies for trail construction and access statewide. Wittrock said his group supports legal on-road use of ATVs. He said users sometimes need to travel on a road to get from one trail to another, and that South Dakota residents east of the Missouri River may ride on roads because the region has almost no trails to legally ride upon. Farmers and ranchers also need to drive ATVs on roads for work, he said.

Wittrock said he and his two sons wear protective gear and helmets when riding (helmet use is required by law for minors on roadways but not during off-road use). Both of his sons have had ATV accidents, including one in which his son rolled his machine and was fortunate to avoid serious injury by wearing a helmet.

"I'd be lying if I said I wasn't shaken up," Wittrock said.

Wittrock said ATVs can be made safer for on-road use by installing tires appropriate for hard surfaces. Manufacturers have also steadily added safety mechanisms, including roll cages, body harnesses, differentials that aid in turns and steering mechanisms that reduce rollovers.

Wittrock said he knows some people ride ATVs regularly on roadways, especially in smaller towns and rural areas, and he said most veteran riders are aware of the dangers and act accordingly.

"As people who have been in ATving and offroading for a long time, we generally know there are risks associated with our hobbies and we're willing to take some of those risks," he said.

Studies reveal on-road dangers

A growing body of scientific research supports the idea that ATV use on roadways – either paved or unpaved – is more dangerous than riding off-road.

A comprehensive study of ATV accident data published in 2016 showed that ATV use is especially dangerous on paved roadways. The study published in the science journal Traffic Injury Prevention reviewed ATV crash data from 1982 to 2012 and found that deaths occurred at twice the rate on paved versus unpaved roads.

The study highlighted other dangers of using ATVs on paved roads, including that victims suffering injuries or death were more likely to be male adolescents, and that alcohol use was higher and helmet use lower in accidents on paved roads.

"Although differences were observed between paved and unpaved roads, our results show that riding on either represented significantly greater dangers than riding off the road," the study concluded. "These data further support laws or ordinances greatly restricting ATV riding on all types of public roadways."

Children remain at high risk of ATV accidents resulting in injuries and death, according to a study published in August 2017 by the research journal Pediatrics. That review examined four years of ATV crash data involving children in Pennsylvania and concluded that youths under 18 were injured in ATV wrecks while driving, as a passenger and while being towed. The study of accidents from 2004 to 2014 showed a slight decrease in youth injuries in ATV accidents during that time frame, which was attributed to the Great Recession of 2008 that reduced disposable income and the ability of families to buy as many recreational vehicles.

The study data showed that helmet use reduced fatalities, that stricter state regulations on youth use of ATVs improved safety, and it supported other studies indicating that riding on paved or unpaved roads was more danger-

Scott Wittrock of Hartford, president of the South Dakota ATV/UTV Association, took this selfie while driving a Utility Terrain Vehicle as his son, Blaine, followed him on an ATV during the 2017 Soggy Bottom Rally that attracted enthusiasts to trails near Deerfield Lake in the Black Hills. ous than riding off-road.

"It has been concluded that being a passenger or using an ATV on paved roads, especially among adolescents, increases the mortality rate," the study authors said. Additionally, "Helmet use was associated with a reduction in the number of deaths, whereas riding on a street or roadway was associated with more deaths."

A 2014 study published in the Journal of Safety Research examined fatal ATV wrecks from 2007-2011 that occurred solely on public roadways.

Of the 1,701 deaths examined, the vast majority of victims were the driver of the ATV and the accidents did not involve another vehicle. Nine in 10 of those who died were male, but females made up a majority of passengers who died. Accidents were more common in rural areas and high speed was a factor in nearly half the fatal wrecks.

A position paper from the Specialty Vehicle Institute of America, which represents ATV manufacturers and distributors, states that all-terrain vehicles of any type do not comply with the extensive safety standards and testing required by the U.S. Department of Transportation for other on-road vehicles. "If ATVs could be kept off of public roads ... a large percentage of ATV-related injuries and deaths would be prevented," the institute said.

South Dakota has seen a number of ATV-related fatalities during use on paved and unpaved roads in recent years.

In July 2012, a 12-year-old boy died after his ATV rolled on him while driving home from school on a gravel road near Claremont.

Prominent golfer and businessman Mark Amundson died after crashing an ATV on a private road in Sully County in August 2014. In November 2017, a 65-year-old recently retired state worker from Pierre died when he lost control of his ATV on a city street after being chased by a dog. That same month, 59-year-old Regional Health executive Larry Veitz died after losing control of his ATV on a forest service road near Spearfish.

State Rep. Jim Schaefer and a woman both died when struck by a truck while riding in a UTV on a highway near Kennebec in May 2018. A month later, an 81-year-old man driving an ATV died after turning in front of a truck trying to pass him on state Highway 47 north of Gregory.

Officials with the Lawrence County Sheriff's Office are hoping that increased patrols this summer might prevent accidents like those or other dangerous behaviors among ATV users.

For the first time, the agency in the northern Black Hills will conduct concentrated patrols this summer specifically aimed at monitoring safety of ATV users, said Capt. Patrick Johnson.

"This is the first year because we've had such an influx of ATVs and UTVs," Johnson said. "We're going to try to be more active in and around the forest this year because we don't see an end to it."

Johnson said officers will work overtime shifts to monitor ATV use and try to protect riders and those around them. Officers will be on watch for intoxication or drug use as well as speeding, which Johnson said is the most dangerous behavior among on-road users.

"There's only so fast you can get going on some of these trails, but on our county roads and highways, the speeds are much higher," Johnson said. "When the speeds are higher, the chance of an accident is much higher."

Designed for off-road use only

Jennissen, the pediatric doctor at the University of Iowa, first took an interest in ATV safety as a youth when a cousin and family friend were killed after turning their ATV in front of a truck on a highway in Minnesota.

Jennissen said he is not against ATVs in general, and in fact has ridden the machines most of his life and still owns a Polaris side-by-side. He regularly teaches ATV safety classes for youths and adults.

Yet Jennissen often sees the disastrous results of ATV crashes in the emergency room, and says many of those wrecks are from on-road use.

His personal experiences, knowledge of ATV manufacturer guidelines and review of recent data and scientific studies have left him adamantly opposed to laws that allow the use of ATVs on paved or unpaved roadways.

ON-ROAD ATV REGISTRATIONS RISING FAST

Here is a look at the number of all-terrain vehicles registered for on-road use in South Dakota compared to registration of all on-road vehicles over the past decade.

Year	ATVs registered	Total vehicles registered
2009	17,913	1,184,344
2012	24,213	1,248,890
2015	30,375	1,336,814
2018	38,377	1,387,196

Source: South Dakota Department of Revenue

Jennissen said more states, counties and municipalities are opening public roads to ATV use due to pressure from ATV riders and organizations that may not realize the heightened dangers of on-road use.

"We don't always legislate for safety or with safety in mind," Jennissen said. "We've been trying to fight the trend of on-road use, trying to develop more and more data to show why this is a real problem, not a 'made up problem,' but it seems like it continues to gain more steam across the country."

Jennissen said he commonly sees injuries and sometimes fatalities that result from vehicle rollovers.

ATV rollovers that whip riders out of the vehicle or result in the machine lying atop riders can lead to limb amputations, crushed body cavities or suffocation if riders cannot lift the machine off themselves.

Several design elements that benefit off-road users make the ATVs far more dangerous when used on roadways, said Jennissen, reached at an FFA conference in Iowa where he was training youths on safe ATV use and injury prevention on farms.

A narrow track, high center of gravity and significant clearance above the travel surface promote rollovers, Jennissen said. Another major factor in rollover wrecks is the knobby, low-pressure tires standard on ATVs that grip tightly on hard surfaces.

The higher top speeds and heavier weights of modern ATVs also heighten the potential for major injuries, he said.

"When they roll over, there's a lot more force generated from this bigger, faster machine," Jennissen said. "If it rolls over on you and no one is around, you can't get it off you and suffocation and death can result."

ATV riders sometimes have an overconfidence that comes from a sense of stability and safety that don't exist, especially on paved and unpaved roads, according to Bill Uhl, an expert who testifies in trials and who has trained military special forces offices on ATV use.

Uhl said ATV manufacturers warn against on-road use but don't tell consumers enough about the reasons why ATVs can be dangerous. For example, ATVs have handlebars or steering wheels that can turn the wheels at a sharper angle than cars and trucks, and many ATV users aren't aware of the rollover risks that result, Uhl said.

Uhl said small tires can be especially dangerous if tire pressure falls even slightly or when used on hard surfaces that grip more than off-road terrain.

Uhl also said some built-in safety features are not as effective as manufacturers claim.

"It's the illusion of stability, and in the UTVs, it's the illusion of safety with the roll cage and harness," Uhl said. "You think you're protected, and it's that illusion of protection that gets them into trouble because ultimately they're not protected."

Uhl also said ATVs are less safe than motorcycles because ATV drivers may be less aware of dangers and undertake riskier behaviors, such as not wearing a helmet or using alcohol, elements noted in several ATV accident studies.

"You're vulnerable on a motorcycle, absolutely, but you have a different caliber of person riding a motorcycle because they know they're not stable and they know they can be dangerous," Uhl said. "You get a different person who drives an ATV, often very unskilled people."

EIGHT "GOLDEN RULES" OF ATV SAFETY

These are safety suggestions for ATV use provided by the Vehicle Safety Institute within the Specialty Vehicle Institute of America, a non-profit trade organization.

1. Always wear a DOT-compliant helmet, goggles, long sleeves, long pants, over-the-ankle boots, and gloves.

2. Never ride on paved roads except to cross when done safely and permitted by law; ATVs are designed to be operated off-highway.

3. Never ride under the influence of alcohol or drugs.

4. Never carry a passenger on a single-rider ATV, and no more than one passenger on an ATV specifically designed for two people.

5. Ride an ATV that's right for your age.

6. Supervise riders younger than 16; ATVs are not toys.

7. Ride only on designated trails and at a safe speed.

8. Take a hands-on ATV RiderCourse and the free online E-Course.

Hanging Up on the Robocall Scourge

Believe it or not, there's a bill in Washington that's sponsored by a conservative Republican and a liberal Democrat; cosponsored by more than half of the Senate; supported by every single state attorney general in the nation, including South Dakota's; and embraced by all commissioners at the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) and the Federal Communications Commission (FCC), in addition to major industry associations and leading consumer groups. My Telephone Robocall Abuse Criminal Enforcement and Deterrence (TRACED) Act checks all of those boxes, and I'm glad to see momentum is continuing to build for this truly bipartisan, pro-consumer effort.

I first introduced the TRACED Act late last year on the heels of my effort to find a solution to end those annoying, illegal, and abusive robocalls that we're all sick of receiving. You've probably heard similar stories or experienced it firsthand, but the calls were getting so bad that some people told me they'd given up answering their phone altogether unless incoming calls were from a number that was already in their phone. Living in fear, anxiety, or annoyance every time the phone rings shouldn't be the new normal.

When I served as chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee, which has jurisdiction over the FTC and FCC, I wanted to hear directly from someone who's behind one of these calling schemes, so I invited notorious mass robocaller Adrian Abramovich to testify before my committee. While he declined my invitation (it was pretty obvious why he didn't want to voluntarily attend), I issued a subpoena and forced him to appear. Such subpoenas are rare. In my four years serving as chairman, I issued only four of them, which shows just how serious of an issue this was to me.

I learned two important lessons from Mr. Abramovich: First, there are few issues, if any, that spark bipartisan fervor quite like the prospect of banning illegal robocalls; and second, current law and existing financial penalties are insufficient to tackle this problem in a real way. People like Mr. Abramovich simply calculated fines and penalties into the cost of doing business. That's when the TRACED Act was born.

While I'll admit that my TRACED Act wouldn't immediately stop every single illegal robocall, I can say that passing it would be one of the most significant steps toward thwarting these nuisance calls since the National Do Not Call registry was created more than 15 years ago. My bill would significantly increase the financial penalty for making these illegal calls, give carriers more tools and flexibility to prevent these calls from reaching your phone in the first place, and, most importantly, work toward creating a credible threat of criminal prosecution (serving behind bars) for the bad guys who are perpetrating these crimes.

I now serve as chairman of the Commerce Committee's Subcommittee on Communications, Technology, Innovation, and the Internet, which is tasked with tackling this issue, and I recently held a hearing to discuss the TRACED Act and the broader issue of illegal robocalls. I hosted a panel of law enforcement professionals, telecommunications experts, and consumer advocates who all agree that now is the time to take action, and the TRACED Act would provide the teeth that law enforcement and regulators need to better address this problem.

The TRACED Act has a lot of support in Washington and around the country. It was unanimously approved earlier this year by the Commerce Committee, and it's now heading to the full Senate for consideration, where I'm hopeful it will also receive wide bipartisan support. Getting this bill to the president's desk would put us in a stronger, more effective position to manage this threat and protect the vulnerable populations these bad actors target. That's my goal, and I'm working to make it happen.

Thanks to all who made my 80th birthday one to remember! I sincerely appreciate your stopping in at the Legion to share a few hours. A special thanks to Kari, Gail and Jeanette and to the staff at the Legion. Also thanks for all of the cards and enclosure. It is one to remember!!!

City mulls over water rate increase; school board will not extend school year

Ted Dickey from the DENR presented the drinking water facilities funding application financial analysis summary. He proposed that the city will need to set aside $11.50 for loan repayment of the water tower funding project. Based on the current rate of 41.93 for 5,000 gallons, the city would need to increase the water rate to a minimum of $45.20 for the first 5,000 gallons, but at that rate, the city would have no money left over for maintenance. The rate increase could be as much as $53.43 for the first 5,000 gallons. The new tower will probably be a single pedestal instead of the current four legs with the pipe in the middle.

Ken Hier of Clark Engineering said the most likely place for the new tower will be just east of the reservoir. Hier said that some sort of temporary pumping station will need to be in place during the construction period.

City Attorney Drew Johnson said that he was hesitant in signing agreements rights now until the 20 days after publication in case someone refers it to a vote.

The total project cost is $2,078,000 with a loan of $1,798,000 and the city having a $280,000 match.

On another note, Hier said it will probably be at the end of May before work begins on the west side street project.

The Malt Beverage Licenses were renewed or Ken's Food Fair, MJ's Sinclair, Dolgen Midwest LLC (Dollar General) and Olde Bank 'n Cafe.

The first reading of an increase in the garbage rate by $2.50 per month as the latest bid for the service increased by $2.50 was approved.

The old sweeper will be surplussed with a value of $8,000. The new sweeper will be coming the first week in May.

Finance Officer Hope Block suggested switching to a Wells Fargo Business Credit Card. Currently the city is using a Chase Visa card, which has eliminated the perks and is also under the ID of the previous finance officer. Block said the new cards will be under the city's ID.

Meanwhile over at the high school, the Groton Area School Board decided not to extend the school year with the additional one and one-half days of missed school from the recent blizzard.

Superintendent Joe Schwan reported that the new school web site will be completed by the end of June and will be available on the App Store and Google Play.

The high school boiler replacement project will be progressing soon.

Elementary Principal Brett Schwan reported that the kindergarten class is back up to 43 students with the addition of one student.

The Groton Area Math Department placed first for the second consecutive year in the the Class A/AA at the NSU Mathematics Contest. Nearly 600 students from 30 schools in three states participated in the event.

A curriculum review presentation was held for the 6-12 language arts. Their recommended purchase of books was $68,000. Each year for the next six years, new books will be shipped out so the students can highlight them and not worry about turning in the books.

The election results were canvassed at the end of the meeting.
