Just Blow with the Flow

The feeling of pressure and pain in the front of the face around the eyes is all too familiar for millions of Americans.

By Andrew Ellsworth, MD ~ Prairie Doc® Perspectives

Our sinuses include four pairs of air-filled cavities above and below the eyes and behind the nose. They are helpful for humidifying the air we breathe, resonating our voices, and lightening the weight of our heads. However, the sinuses can be prone to inflammation and infection.

The mucous lining of the sinuses serves as an antimicrobial barrier to infection, and little hairs called cilia help to sweep out unwanted bacteria and viruses. Disruptions to this system commonly come from allergies and viruses. If the passageways get blocked, then bacteria can grow and flourish in the moist, warm, mucous.

Sinusitis is inflammation of the sinuses which can cause the full feeling behind the eyes, pressure, and pain. If left untreated, it can cause fevers and a systemic response from the body. Chronic sinusitis, lasting more than three months, can be caused by allergies, nasal polyps, ongoing infection, a deviated nasal septum, pollutants, or other conditions.

One of the keys to treatment and prevention of sinusitis is keeping the sinuses open and draining. Nasal saline, a saltwater mixture, can be used to help rinse out and open the sinuses and can be just as effective as antibiotics. If allergies are at fault, a steroid nasal spray or steroid pills can be used to decrease inflammation and swelling. A nasal steroid spray can also help treat a nasal polyp, helping to shrink the polyp to aid in the circulation of air and mucous. For some people with chronic and recurring sinusitis, surgery is their best option and can provide welcome relief.

Try this. Hold one nostril shut as you breathe in and out of the other. Now switch to the other nostril and breathe in and out. Chances are you can breathe more freely on one side compared to the other. Wait a few hours, try it again and chances are the opposite side is more open. Congestion in our nose naturally changes sides every four to six hours. If you find that one side is always blocked, then you may want to see your primary doctor or an ear, nose, and throat specialist.

Our bodies are designed for flow. The flow of air, food, blood, waste, and even mucous keeps us healthy. Next time you blow your nose, remember you are helping the natural movement of mucous, so just "blow with the flow."

Lana's Annals

Greetings once again. This week went really quickly as there were more bills being drafted, passed in committee, and presented on the floor for debate.

Our education committee had a lengthy discussion on HB1044, in which the Legislative Tribal Relations Committee asked for Indian education to be moved to the Department of Education. A contentious issue, we discussed the topic for two hours. Tribal Secretary Flute has only been working with native education for two years, and one of these was during covid. As he has two programs in place for advancing learning in reservation schools, we decided to leave things as they currently are. The proponent side favoring the move offered no instructional methods that they would use to enhance the children's learning. Thus HB1044 was sent to the 41st day.

In local government we heard HB1058, which would enable voters to recall a county commissioner. The formula put to us was to have 15 per cent of the voters in the commissioner's district sign the petition for recall. If the members are at large, 5 per cent of the voters in the county could petition for recall. I expressed my opposition for this bill as a group of people who promoted an area industry or project (Cafo or dairy, for example) could oppose a commissioner for voting against it, charging him with being "unfairly partial" or "oppressive" and get that person recalled. This bill was brought forth as a result of a dispute occurring in the southern part of the state and in one county. I do not think that as a legislature, we can take a broad brush, based on one local issue, and make a law. As the majority of our committee shared my views, we sent it to the 41st day, which killed the bill.

On the floor we debated HB1015, which opens up the opportunity for more appraisers in our state. As was explained, those who want to get into the profession begin by taking classes and then taking a national test. If they pass, they must find a seasoned appraiser under whom to apprentice. The problem is that many times no one is willing to take on the apprentice. Perhaps they just do not want to end up having more competition in this field.. The bill would open up an apprentice experience training program to combat the problem. Hopefully with the passage of HB1015, home and commercial buyers will be able to close on purchases in a quicker, more efficient manner instead of having to wait about seven weeks for property appraisals.

HB1011, which raises the rates for boiler inspections by 10 dollars, was passed on the House floor. Even though it was a reasonable increase, perhaps, no one said why it was completely necessary. I did not vote for this fee increase.

Also in the House was HB1037 which called for the biennial renewal of licenses for electrical contractors, journeymen, and those in a related profession. That means that they must pay for two years everytime they renew. The fees were not just double but extra cost was added as well. For example, a person who paid 40 dollars for his for one year now must pay 200 dollars total for two years. When asked why so much, the response was the new online software was expensive and the contractors actually wanted to use this online method. I found it hard to believe that people would want to pay that much more. I asked the question what would happen if the contractor only completed one of the two years and either quit or died. Would there then be a refund for the other year? When I found out that no provisions had been made for that, I voted "no." The bill did pass, however, and will go to the Senate commerce committee next.

I have received a lot of correspondence lately on HJR5001. Each year lobbyists come to Pierre to promote this issue because that is what they get paid to do. A few of our legislators are COS (Convention of States) members; most are not. I can only tell you my thoughts. If we had enough states to support the idea, (we do not), we could all decide on one issue we would discuss and then decide on a meeting place. That does not mean that all states who decide on the topic would stand by their word. Once the Constitution is opened, anything is fair game. Those of you who have been involved in contract negotiations will easily perceive this problem. There is nothing in Article V or in any part of the Constitution that authorizes the limiting of the agenda of an Article V Convention. The Supreme Court will not be a part of the amending process. Then what?? On the surface while we look to solve a problem, we could end up with even worse ones such as eliminating of the electoral college (look at how many big states would like that), getting rid of term limits (i.e. Presidential), just to name two. I will listen to the arguments once again, but I am inclined to think a COS would not be beneficial.even though I wish it were. This next week will even be more chaotic than last week. I will keep you updated as to what transpires! Stay tuned.

Glimpses From Greenfield

Through three weeks of Session, our Appropriations Committee has continued to be hard at work listening to the Governor's recommendations for funding of the various departments and bureaus of the state government. We also have had a number of subcommittee meetings to drill down on specific issues. There is a real desire to try to provide more resources for those who care for people who cannot care for themselves. This is not to suggest we do not have other key priorities, but I'm gaining a sense there will be a strong focus on long-term healthcare, adjustment training center, mental health institution, and chemical dependency counseling funding. I will keep you apprised of progress we make as we work through the process.

With the passage of IM 26 and Constitutional Amendment A, the voters placed the onus on the legislature to provide a regulatory structure for medicinal marijuana and recreational or adult-use marijuana. While I have not personally been an advocate for the marijuana industry, largely because the drug remains federally prohibited, I do believe we need to provide a legal framework given the public vote. Of course, with Constitutional Amendment A currently the subject of a legal challenge, the courts will weigh in on the legality of adult-use marijuana, but it is still important that we proceed as though that will be the law beginning on July 1. If we choose to wait until subsequent sessions to address these matters, we face the potential of having an entirely unregulated drug industry in South Dakota. As such, I spent several hours last week working with people on both sides of the issue to try to hammer out some language that would be specific to the recreational side of the equation. Also, a small contingent of Senators has been charged with looking at the medical side, and they will report back with their recommendations in the near future. I bring this up because of the MANY questions I have already fielded about what is going on regarding all-things-cannabis. In fact, it was the very first topic of discussion brought up by a constituent at our first cracker barrel of the year.

Most of the bills we have taken up on the Senate floor to-date have been "clean-up" in nature, thus there has not been a lot of controversy. This week on the Senate side, however, we will be starting to get into some bills that have been generating more buzz. One measure that we heard on the floor was SCR 601, which would urge the members of South Dakota's federal Congressional delegation to vote against any bill seeking to make Washington, D.C. a state. Senator Bolin pitched the bill and gave a very strong argument and historical perspective as to why D.C. should not be eligible for statehood, including relative size and why D.C. was established as a non-state in the first place. This was one of the rare measures that was decided on strict party lines with the 32 Republicans voting in favor of the resolution and 3 Democrats voting against it.

Looking ahead, I anticipate legislation addressing the bill that passed last year regarding driver's licenses for young drivers, a revision to the school funding formula as it relates to redistributing wind energy tax dollars that were "equalized" under the 2016 formula re-write, and a host of pro-life measures and pro-gun ownership bills. Also, I will continue working on a bill regarding ensuring the integrity of grain moisture- and protein-measuring devices. I brought a bill three years ago surrounding this issue, and I was told by lobbyists representing the industry that IF we allowed that bill to be killed, they would come back the following year with a proposal everybody could live with. They did not live up to their end of the bargain. Last year, once again, they told a House sponsor a similar message. Since they brought nothing forward, I have asked for a bill identical to last year's draft. I am hopeful that as the conversation evolves we will be able to come up with language that will ensure our producers can have the utmost confidence in the system. We ensure that gas pumps are properly metered and produce scales at the grocery stores are likewise properly calibrated. When it comes to hundreds of thousands bushels of crops, I would think we should be certain that those measuring devices are also tested and certified as accurate. I am also bringing a bill that will seek to clarify a matter relative to media coverage of high school activities. We passed a law several years ago that spoke to this, but the SD High School Activities Association feels they have found a loophole to get around the requirement that ALL media outlets have equal access to our publicly-funded schools' extracurricular activities. I will provide more narrative on this next week. Until next time, be well, be blessed, and stay safe! Brock

COVID antibody treatment available and effective but delivery slower than desired in S.D.

By: Bart Pfankuch

A relatively new medical treatment that can reduce symptoms, speed recovery and even prevent death due to COVID-19 in some patients is widely available across the U.S. and South Dakota but is not being used as much as health officials and medical providers would like.

Amy Thiesse

Only about 30% to 40% of the nation's available supply of therapeutic treatments known as monoclonal antibodies had been administered as of late January, nearly three months after the drugs received emergency authorization for use by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration.

SOUTH DAKOTA NEWS WATCH

Monoclonal antibody treatments are labmade proteins delivered to patients through infusions. The proteins heighten the immune system's ability to fight the coronavirus by blocking the passage of the virus into human cells.

The treatment is being made available mostly to people who recently tested positive with COVID-19 and are age 65 or older or who have severe obesity, kidney disease or diabetes. Those who test positive and are 55 or over with an underlying medical condition can also qualify.

Two types of antibody treatments received emergency FDA authorization in November: bamlanivimab, developed by Eli Lilly and commonly known as "BAM"; and casirivimab/ imdevimab, developed by Regeneron and commonly known by the company name.

The South Dakota medical community has generally embraced the treatments and has taken significant steps to develop an effective system of administering the drugs, including creating safe settings to give infusions, making doses of the drugs available in both urban and rural areas, and by implementing processes to notify new COVID-19 patients of their options for treatment.

Sanford Health, the Sioux Falls-based health system that is among the nation's largest, has taken a lead role in South Dakota and beyond in setting up infusion centers and developing computer systems to identify and contact patients who may qualify for the treatments.

So far, medical providers have reported very cost of the infusion for an uninsured patient would be $1,000, according to Monument Health spokesman Dan Daly, though he added that Monument has internal programs that can lower or spread out that cost for uninsured patients.

Rollout slower than desired

The treatments began in the U.S. with infusions given to a handful of high-profile patients, including former President Donald Trump, who received the Regeneron infusion as part of his treatment for COVID-19 and touted its effectiveness.

The drugs were authorized for use in people over age 12 and over 88 pounds in weight, but are almost exclusively targeted now at those at highest risk of complications or death from COVID-19, including older patients with underlying medical conditions.

One hurdle to wider use of the treatments is that they typically must be prescribed and administered within 10 days of a positive CO-VID-19 test and before any serious symptoms take hold, or before patients are hospitalized or in need of oxygen therapy. The drugs are far less effective after that time frame and are unlikely to be prescribed at that point.

Some medical providers and potential patients are not fully convinced of the safety or effectiveness of the drugs because they were approved quickly by the FDA under emergency conditions. Many urban hospitals in the U.S. that are battling high COVID-19 case counts have also had difficulty allocating resources to provide antibody treatments.

The infusion is a procedure that can scare off some patients. Infusions take up to three hours and must be done at a medical office or hospital, and only with a referral from a doctor. Because they are known to be infected, patients seeking the treatment must be isopositive results in regard to the treatment's lated as much as possible from the rest of the Furthermore, awareness of the availability Officials with Sanford estimate the treat- of the drug has come on somewhat slowly in ments have prevented a year's worth of cu- the medical community and especially among members of the public. "It's a combination of factors" that have slowed use of the drug, said Elleen Kane, a spokeswoman for the U.S. Health and Human Services Department. "Some of it is a lack of public awareness, some is that it's kind of a different kind of treatment than people are used to, and you have to find patients who tested positive and then give them an infusion very quickly, so it takes some thinking through." HHS has been aggressive in purchasing The drugs are provided by the federal gov- doses of the drugs and has quickly delivered

The federal agency in mid-January launched a new web-based locator for medical providers and the pubic to quickly identify hospitals and clinics where doses of the drug had been delivered by the federal government. At that time, HHS also announced it had made agreements to purchase about 300,000 more doses of Regeneron's drug and about 3 million more doses of BAM from Eli Lilly.

Some states have seen a very slow rollout of antibody treatments. Massachusetts, for example, had received about 5,600 doses of the drugs but administered only 133 infusions as of early January. In Minnesota, medical providers had received about 12,450 doses of the treatments by early January and had administered only 1,650 infusions.

South Dakota has taken a much more proactive approach to informing the medical community and the public about the treatments and creating a system to deliver the drugs to patients.

After several requests by News Watch for information from the state Department of Health regarding number of doses received and infusions delivered statewide, the department did not respond.

Gov. Kristi Noem shone a spotlight on the use and effectiveness of the drugs in her Jan. 12 State of the State Address by mentioning how the Good Samaritan Society nursing home in Wagner, S.D., had teamed with Wagner Community Memorial Hospital to successfully treat dozens of nursing home residents with BAM during a COVID-19 outbreak in December.

Even with strong systems of delivery in place, medical providers in South Dakota say they would like to make the treatments even more accessible and raise the rate of infusions given to newly diagnosed COVID-19 patients.

South Dakota health systems are continuing to look for ways to educate people about the availability and effectiveness of the treatments in the hope of improving the health of COVID-19 patients and reducing the need for hospital stays.

Monument Health, which serves much of West River, is providing infusions at hospitals in Rapid City, Sturgis, Lead-Deadwood, Spearfish and Custer, according to Brandi Tackett, director of clinical innovations at Monument.

In an email to News Watch, Tackett said Monument is making new COVID-19 patients aware of the treatment options through calls from its Covid Nurse Triage Center and by staying in contact with medical providers, emergency rooms and urgent-care centers across the region.

Monument has seen "lower than expected hospitalizations" among high-risk COVID-19 patients who have undergone the treatment, Tackett wrote.

The federal government, the state of South Dakota and individual providers have made it a priority to get doses of the antibody treatments to hospitals and clinics in rural areas to make the treatments accessible to rural residents.

"It is available where the patient lives, and the best advantage is that we can give it within their community or within a short drive and not have them drive to Sioux Falls," Thiesse said. "Even if you're not a Sanford patient, if you've had a positive COVID test in the past 10 days, reach out to us and we will get you set up with the treatment."

The Faulkton Area Medical Center in northcentral South Dakota received about three dozen doses of BAM in November and December and has since delivered about two dozen infusions, said Lindsey Poeppel, director of nursing at the 12-bed hospital.

Poeppel said she believes the treatments have saved lives and could have saved more COVID-19 patients if the drug had arrived earlier or its effectiveness had been better understood when Faulk County had a surge in cases in early November.

"We have not had to admit anyone who has taken BAM to our hospital," she said. "If the word had been out, and if the drug had been given to us during our surge, we questioned if we could have saved a few more lives."

Dr. Christopher Robbins, a practitioner with the Fall River Health Services in Hot Springs, said the rural provider received about 10 doses of the treatments and had administered about a half dozen as of mid-January.

body treatments or any other new therapeutics that are developed to treat COVID-19 will be an important and ongoing process, Robbins said.

manager for Sanford Health. "Even when some are admitted to the hospital their level of service has been consistently lower compared to other patients who are admitted with COVID."

Baker said Sanford has worked hard to connect with medical providers inside and outside the system as well as with individual patients to let them know the treatments are available, but that some people who test positive for COVID-19 still may not be aware of all their treatment options. The health system has provided about 400 infusions at its main hospital in Sioux Falls since Nov. 19, a spokeswoman said.

"There's obviously people who do not know that this exists, but we do have quite a few people who call and say they had a positive test and heard that Sanford is offering these infusions, and is there any way [they] can receive this treatment," Baker said.

Baker said patients who receive the treatments are contacted by phone by a medical professional within 48 hours of the infusions to check on their condition and progress.

"We are seeing that a lot of patients are feeling better about 36 hours after receiving the infusion," Baker said.

Sanford Health determined who was eligible for the treatment by creating a computer program to automatically check the health records of people who test positive for COVID-19.

If those who test positive meet the age criteria or have known co-morbidities, a callcenter employee from Sanford contacts them and informs them that the antibody treatments are available.

Word of mouth among the public has steadily increased, and now more people are calling Sanford or their local doctors to inquire about the treatments upon testing positive, she said.

John G. Murphy of Rapid City and his wife both tested positive for COVID-19 on to refer them for the treatment, and over the next two days, they both underwent hourlong infusions of the Regeneron drugs at the Monument hospital in Rapid City.

Murphy said he had minor side effects, such as tingling in his fingers and toes and mild chills that went away on the second day, "I feel these were indications of a good thing happening," he wrote in an email to News Watch.

Soon after the infusions, Murphy said he and his wife began to recover and saw a reduction in earlier COVID-19 symptoms that had included lack of appetite, major fatigue and a sore throat.

About a week after the infusions, John said they received a call from the state health department and were told they could end their isolation. "It is effective and helped us recover," Murphy wrote of the antibody treatment. The Murphys have health insurance and have yet to receive a bill for the treatment, Murphy wrote on Jan. 26.

Administering the drug is done on an outpatient basis in a COVID-safe setting where all involved wear protective equipment and the patient sits in a recliner. The two- to threehour process includes preparation of the dose, consultation between the patient and a nurse, insertion of an IV, an hourlong delivery of the drug and a final hour of observation before the patient is released.

Normally I would be writing about the Pro Bowl this week, highlighting any plays that featured a Vikings player. Unfortunately, this year has been anything but normal. This season, the NFL decided they would cancel the Pro Bowl game and replace it with a virtual event in which six players (three representing each conference) and two celebrities play a game of "Madden NFL 21." So instead of recapping a video game, we'll take a look back at this past season to determine who was the Vikings' offensive and defensive MVPs.

Offensive MVP

It should come as no surprise that this year's offensive MVP is Dalvin Cook. He finished second in the league in rushing yards (1,557), rushing touchdowns (16), yards per game (111.2), carries (312), and carries that gained a first down (91). Dalvin is one of the best running backs in the NFL and the Vikings' offense runs through him – whether it's handoffs, play-action passes, or screens. The front office gave Cook a five-year contract extension last offseason, locking him in through the 2025 season.

Biggest Surprise

Wide receiver is one of the most difficult positions to play in the NFL, which is why most receivers don't usually contribute much until they've been in the league for a year or two. Justin Jefferson isn't like most receivers. After sitting on the bench the first two games of the season, Jefferson was named a starter in week three. He finished the season with 88 receptions for 1400 yards (third in the NFL and a rookie record).

Defensive MVP

The Vikings didn't have a wonderful season, and the injuries on defense were the main culprit. Danielle Hunter, Anthony Barr, Michael Pierce, Eric Kendricks, Mike Hughes, Cameron Dantzler, and Holton Hill all missed significant time last season. With so many injuries, it was difficult picking a defensive MVP. However, after digging through the stats, it was clear Eric Wilson had the most impactful season. Wilson led the Vikings in tackles (122), tackles for a loss (8), and fumble recoveries (2). He was also the runner up in interceptions (3), pass deflections (8), and QB hits. Wilson had some issues in stopping the run, but his coverage skills were huge for a defense starting multiple disappoint. Skol! rookies in the secondary.

Biggest Surprise

Cameron Dantzler was forced into action sooner than anyone anticipated because of the injury to Mike Hughes. The first half of the season was a roller coaster for the rookie cornerback, but he started to turn it on in the second half of the season and was looking like the best corner on the roster by the end. D.J. Wonnum was another candidate for the biggest surprise on defense. Like Dantzler, Wonnum turned it on in the second half of the season and was making big plays every game, looking like a true diamond in the rough.

Looking Ahead

This weekend is the Super Bowl, featuring Tom Brady and the Tampa Bay Buccaneers versus Patrick Mahomes and the Kansas City Chiefs. The Chiefs are three and a half point favorites, and ESPN agrees, giving them a 52% chance to win. The two teams are incredibly similar, with both teams featuring legendary quarterbacks on offenses that are overflowing with playmakers. Both teams average 30 points per game, while both defenses allow 366 yards per game. The two teams battled earlier this season, with the Chiefs coming out on top 27-24. I expect another close game on Sunday, and hopefully, the commercials don't disappoint. Skol!

Helmets were optional

I don't know if you've been following the news, but enough is happening in the North Dakota legislature to make your head spin and make you spew pea soup like Linda Blair. District 28 Rep. Jeff Magrum has introduced a bill to pretty much do away with seatbelt laws in North Dakota. Now, I don't know if Magrum played high school football but if he did I'm pretty sure helmets were optional, too.

According to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, between 1975 and 2017, increased seatbelt use saved 374,000 lives and another 386,000 deaths could have been prevented had usage been at 100%. To be fair, if you get your information from Parler, no one dies in traffic wrecks, anymore—they're all COVID-related.

by Tony Bender

One presumes that Magrum has never done a weekend ride-a-along with an ambulance crew or spent time in the E.R

as doctors try to stitch hamburger back together again. He's part of the Bastiat Caucus which believes in less government intrusiveness into personal decisions, except of course, when it pertains to women.

Smoke 'em if you got 'em

Another surprising bill from a North Dakota Republican comes from Rep. Jason Dockter of Bismarck who wants to legalize recreational marijuana. I should clarify. He's personally against it—he just sees the writing on the wall. Eleven states have already approved it, and in South Dakota, 54% of the people voted to legalize the devil's lettuce. They were convinced, I think, that drugs are harmless based on the likelihood that their governor has been on hallucinogenics for years, and she seems intermittently rational. Forget about Trump, in a few years, South Dakotans will put Cheech and Chong on Mt. Rushmore.

Dockter's bill makes sense. Might as well keep the marijuana tax dollars in the state and keep seatbelt-less North Dakotans from floating across the border to buy weed the way they used to when South Dakota's drinking age for 3.2 beer was 18.

It's still under the rug

Meanwhile, in South Dakota, the investigation into Attorney General Jason Ravnsborg is suspiciously quiet. Suspicious being the operative word. In September, he mowed down a pedestrian near Highmore, S.D., who was walking at night with a light in his hand on the shoulder of the road. Ravnsborg led the sheriff to believe that it might have been a deer. Somehow, neither one of them discovered the body in eight inches of grass by the side of the road that night. The sheriff lent Ravnsborg his personal car to get back to Pierre that night. In the morning, Ravnsborg "discovered" the body when he returned the vehicle. All we know is that Ravnsborg was "distracted" when he struck the man. Now, do you believe for a moment that an average citizen behind the wheel wouldn't be doing time behind bars by now? Me neither.

Shouldn't you be able to see your checkbook?

As a publisher, I hate legislative sessions because there's always a bill or two to close down open records or limit government accountability. House Bill 1108 would remove the requirement that counties publish the bills as part of the monthly minutes. Really? Shouldn't you have easy access to your checkbook? After all, it's taxpayer money, and the cost is a tiny fraction of what the annual budget is. Those hugely discounted rates are set by the state and not by the newspapers themselves. The cost to you is pocket change. Oversight, however, is invaluable. The reality is, especially in a state with an older population, the newspaper, not the internet, is where people go for information about their local government. A third of seniors don't use the internet and 22% of rural citizens don't have access to the web. A 2020 independent study showed 86% of North Dakota adults read newspapers, and 88% say that's where they read public notices. Call your representative and let them know you support getting all the information about local government, especially expenditures.
