As South Dakota campaigns launch, Thune mulls retirement

By STEPHEN GROVES Associated Press SIOUX FALLS, S.D. (AP) — South Dakota political candidates are revving into full campaign mode this week with one big exception: Republican Sen. John Thune, who has delayed a reelection announcement as he considers Thune, a longtime fixture as the state GOP's elder statesman and a likely pick to be the next Senate GOP leader, had indicated he would make a reelection decision over the holidays. But as South Dakota's campaign season officially opened this month with candidates allowed to circulate nominating petitions, Thune has made no indication he's any closer to a decision on seeking a fourth term.

His hesitancy provided further evidence of how serious he is about retiring — a potential One of the items on the agenda include development that would upend national GOP politics and create a scramble among South Dakota Republicans to fill the void. With the Senate in session this week — and a campaign Mayor Scott Hanlon for a three-year term, announcement not expected until he can travel back to his home state — the waiting will likely last at least several more days.

Thune, who is currently the second-ranking was a strong yes for running again. Blackmun Republican in Senate leadership, told the Black Hills Pioneer during an impromptu interview at job has given her more responsibilities so she a Christian bookstore last month that his wife may not have the time to devote to the council wanted him to retire. Weekly Vikings Roundup By Jack & Duane Kolsrud

It was a classic late-season game for two Central division rivals, the temperatures hovering in the single digits and a lot on the line for both teams. The Vikings were trying to extend their season while the Packers were looking to lock up home-field advantage and a first-round bye in the playoffs.

The odds were against the Vikings from making the playoffs and even beating the Green Bay Packers in Lambeau Field, but trying to do it with your 6'5" backup quarterback was a tall task. Kirk Cousins was out due to Covid-19. Mike Zimmer predicted this could happen in the most inopportune time when he learned that Kirk wasn't getting vaccinated. They stayed with the Packers early, but after four straight three and outs in the first half, the defense tired out and allowed the Packers to take control at halftime. Green Bay wins the game 37-10, ending the playoff hopes for the Vikings.

After giving up a field goal to start the game, the Vikings appeared to have some momentum moving the ball down the field only to have a 25-yard play negated on an illegal downfield penalty on Christian Darrisaw. The team rarely put any pressure on Rodgers, while wide receivers Davante Adams and Allan Lazard made the Viking defensive backs look silly. The Packers lead at halftime, 20-3.

The second half began much like the first half as the Vikings' punt after going three and out. The Packers quickly took advantage and marched down the field for an AJ Dillon short touchdown run. After giving up another field goal, the Vikings scored a 14-yard touchdown pass to KJ Osborn. The play of the game came on this drive when a deflected pass over the middle ended up in the hands of center Garrett Bradbury, who proceeded to scamper 21 yards to set up the score by Osborn.

The Packers score another AJ Dillon touchdown in the fourth quarter to seal the game.

Statistically, the Packers dominated offensively, outgaining the Vikings 482 to 206 yards while controlling the time of possession from 38:00 to 22:00.

Where does this take the Vikings? Since investing $88 million in a franchise quarterback after going 13-3 in 2017, they have missed the playoffs for the second year in a row and the third time in four Kirk Cousins seasons. The quarterback investment, along with injuries, has cost the Vikings defense to suffer, going from a top ten unit to being one of the worst in the NFL. Mike Zimmer is frequently referred to as a defensive guru, but you can't succeed if the talent is not there. Bud Grant used to say it's easy being a good coach when you have great players. That may no longer be the case for this aging Viking

Offensively, the Vikings

have played pretty well, but there is a lot of angst around the conservative play-calling tions. The main question is do they stick with Cousins

Rethinking winter sports

When I was a kid, Whitey, Gare Bare, Hawkeye, and I would play football in the snowbanks beside my house. Because we had brain damage. Tackle football in sub-arctic temperatures didn't help. The end result is my career choices came down to either column-writing or politics but I still had too many healthy brain cells for the latter.

You don't see many ranchers indulging in winter sports. After spending half the day coaxing the tractor to life and dodging irritated bovines, a warm hearth seems to be a better option. If they have a snowmobile, it's a work tool.

That's
by Tony Bender

Let's face it, a snowmobile is a winter motorcycle, and when I ride my Harley, I don't want frostbite.

My Grandpa Spilloway, however, famously pulled into the yard in the 70s with a new Rupp on a trailer. Grandma stalked out into the yard and said, "Where's mine?" So, he got back into the pickup and bought her a Polaris. Mostly, they were for us grandkids, though, because they kept us out of the house, and they didn't have a football.

That brings us to the annual pilgrimage of pickups to the bottom of thinly-iced lakes. Maybe it's just me, but I don't want a dunk in frigid waters unless it's preceded by a sauna, and that never made much sense to me, either. If I want to sweat, I'll bet on the Vikings.

I've long held this theory that ice fishing is a silent, desperate plea for help, and the time spent on the ice is proportionate to the happiness of one's marriage. Some guys would live out there year-round if the ice didn't eventually thaw. In June. For some, sinking to the bottom of the lake in a Silverado coffin is more appealing than facing the old lady with four small perch and peppermint schnapps on your breath. Maybe I'm a cynic, but I'm not sure what "cynic" means exactly, because I have brain damage. But I know enough to come in out of the cold.

Now, anyway.

When I worked radio in Juneau, Alaska, which is way warmer than North Dakota, I got an annual pass to the ski slopes on Eagle Mountain where Olympian Hilary Lynd learned to ski. She became a national champion at 16 because everyone else died up there.

So, why did I ski? Because the ski pass was free in exchange for me giving the resort free plugs on the air, encouraging people to commit suicide on the slopes which is a much more exciting way to go than sinking to the bottom of a lake in a Dodge 4x4. Besides, it was free, and I'm a frugal German. I'll do things I don't like, even if they're dangerous if it seems like a good deal. I mean, hook me up with a ticket to a lutefisk dinner, and I'm there, and no one likes lutefisk. And there are always fatalities.

I got off the air at 9 a.m., so I headed to the slopes everyday in the winter, which in Alaska is every day. I had the slopes to myself. Just me, the lift operators, and the cadaver dogs. I wasn't skilled, but I was fast. Because I wasn't particularly good at turning. I spent much of my time crawling back up the mountain to pick up my goggles, gloves, poles and skis that were scattered during my frequent falls. Then, I would proceed to the lift where a transplanted Jamaican—true story—would score my gymnastics. "Nice tumble, mon!"

Once, I found myself skidding at about 600 mph on my gore tex ski pants—the only article of clothing

I didn't lose—toward some trees. This was pre-Sonny Bono. I cracked my shin but was able to limp-ski my way back to the lodge, fearing that if I laid there too long the cadaver dogs would eat me.

I was back the next day. Because, well, it was free.

I'm officially retired from all that stuff. I now limit my winter sports activities to shoveling, getting vehicles unstuck, and feats of derring-do in a Bobcat. (Keep the bucket down, dummy.) But it does have a heater.

Traphagen has double-double in Groton's win over Webster

Groton Area's girls' basketball team ended a two-game losing streak and ended the 2021 year with a 48-40 Northeast Conference win over Webster Area.

The game was played at Webster and was broadcast live on GDILIVE.COM, sponsored by Dacotah Bank, Groton Ford, John Sieh Agency, Bary Keith at Harr Motors and Allied Climate Professionals with Kevin Nehls.

Webster Area lit the nets on fire in the first quarter, or more specifically, Jaiden Bauer who made four threepointers in the first quarter. Webster Area held a 16-13 lead at the end of the first quarter. Groton Area made five of 15 field goals for 33 percent while Webster Area was five of eight for 63 percent. The two inside players for the Tigers, Gracie Traphagen and Jaedyn Penning, teamed for 11 points in the first quarter.

Bauer and Erin Case each threw in a three-pointer to start the second quarter and that prompted Coach Matt Locke to call a time out with Webster holding a 22-15 players, Jaedyn Penning (41) and Gracie Traphalead. Some adjustments were made and Webster Area gen. (Photo by Paul Kosel) found itself on the receiving end of those adjustments.

Groton Area made the final six points of the first half and closed the gap to one at half time, 22-21. In the second quarter, Groton Area made three of 12 shots for 25 percent and Webster Area was two of seven for 28 percent. Traphagen and Penning did all of the scoring in the second quarter for the Tigers.

Brooke Gengerke and Alyssa Thaler each made a three-pointer for the Tigers, but the Bearcats countered with a three-pointer by Case and Harley Johnson as well. Groton got the lead to start the third quarter and after > the game was tied at 24 and 27, the Tigers scored six straight points to take a 33-27 lead. Webster Area then called time out. Groton Area led at the end of the third quarter, 35-32. Groton Area made six of 14 field goals for 42 percent while Webster Area was four of nine for 44 percent.

> Groton Area watched a seven-point lead dwindle down to two with 1:27 left in the game, 42-40. Webster Area went scoreless the rest of the game and the Tigers made five of six free throws down the stretch to secure the 48-40 win. In the fourth quarter, Groton Area made four of 10 shots for 40 percent while Webster Area was two of 12 for 17 percent.

> Gracie Traphagen led the Tigers with a double-double, having 16 points which included six of six free throws, 14 rebounds, one assist, one steal and one block shot. Jaedyn Penning had 11 points, three rebounds, one assist and one steal. Alyssa Thaler had nine points, two rebounds two assists and two steals. Brooke Gengerke had five points, two rebounds and one assist. Jerica Locke had four points, four rebounds, three assists and three steals. Allyssa Locke had two points, two rebounds, five assists and three steals. Kennedy Hansen had one free throw and three rebounds. Coach Matt Locke was pleased with the overall effort of everyone, but one player did catch his eye. "Aspen Johnson had a heck of a game," he said. "She was making things happen." Even though she did not score, she did battle for three rebounds and had three steals as well.

Groton Area made 18 of 52 total shots for 35 percent while Webster Area was 13 of 36 for 36 percent. From the line, Groton Area made 10 of 13 free throws off of Webster Area's 14 team fouls. Webster Area made five of five free throws off of Groton Area's nine team fouls. The Tigers had 33 rebounds and the lucky number 13 was for turnovers, assists and steals. Webster Area had 11 turnovers.

Groton Area won the junior varsity game, 37-28.

That game was also broadcast live on GDILIVE.COM, sponsored by Ken and Teresa Roberts of Tonganoxie, Kan.

Kennedy Hansen led the Tigers with 17 points while Faith Traphagen had six, Brooklyn Hansen and Elizabeth Fliehs each had five and Laila Roberts and Jaedyn Penning each had two points. Any Vander Linden led the Beartcats with nine points and Allison Case had eight.

Webster Area won the C game, 18-16. Mia Crank made two free throws with 54 seconds left in the game to give the Tigers a 16-15 lead. Both teams missed free throws and with two seconds left, Bailee Ninke made a three-pointer to give Webster an 18-16 lead. A last second Perhaps it could be called the new world. Or perhaps it could be called quick to type and slow to think.

I remember when I was a kid that I was told if we were angry at someone, write a letter (for those who don't know what that is - you take a piece of paper and with a pen or pencil, and actually write a note). Once your letter was written, you would take your letter and set it aside for a day before mailing it. The next day you would look at your letter, and probably decide it's not worth mailing and then throw it away. It served a two-fold purpose - you got off your chest what you wanted to say, but you didn't ruffle any more feathers than what was necessary and all was well.

Too many times I have seen on social media family drama issues.

Now days, if there is something or someone you don't like, there is no "cooling" off period. You quickly get on your phone or computer, pop open your social media platform, type what's on your angry mind, and then hit send. Boom! Now all of your friends and relatives can read what's on your mind. So now, the battle begins. To say the devil is in the details is a statement that is more true than it seems.

On the one side of the ring, we have you, not listed as a fighter with your boxing gloves on. Your friends and relatives come sliding over to you, encouraging you, feeling sorry of you, trying to make you feel good. Suddenly, Scotty from the Enterprise beams the victim of the social media attack to the other side of the ring. You are stripped from your peaceful realm into the battle ring without warning. And there you stand, in awe, trying to figure out what just happened. Your friends and relatives start encouraging you, feeling sorry for you, trying to make you feel good.

Now they put the boxing gloves on you and you're suppose to attack. The crowd goes wild as both sides begin to engage in the battle. It's all star wrestling in a digital world. The victim doesn't want to engage, but feels they have to. One punches and then there's the counter punch. And it gets heated. Pretty soon the match is the buzz all over social media and everyone is talking about it. "Did you see that post?" and now we have the number one show that everyone wants to tune into to watch the punches and counter punches.

Really.

The problem that lies here is that no one wins. One side, with all of their friends and relatives, may think they have won. The other side may think they have won as well. The only winner is the crowd that got the tickets to watch the show for entertainment. Oh yes, eventually, the punches get smaller and soon disappear into the sunset. The attention will be drawn somewhere else. Some people love to dwell on drama. But ask yourself this question, "What have you accomplished?" Or better yet, ask yourself, "Is God proud of me for the way I handled that?"

Next time, pick up the phone and make that call. It might be a simple mis-understanding. And even if it's not, don't put your personal battles on social media. God's commandments are just as relevant on social media as they are in real life. Be responsible and write a letter.

Dear EarthTalk: Do wealthy people generate more pollution and/or carbon emissions than the less fortunate?

George P., Greenwich, CT

In a word, yes. The richest 10 percent of humanity was responsible for 52 percent of global emissions between 1990 and 2015, according to a 2020 Oxfam report. The richest one percent alone produced 15 percent of global emissions during that time, more than double that of the entire poorest half of humanity. This phenomenon is called emissions inequality: Wealthier nations and individuals emit excessively large amounts of greenhouse gases, while poorer nations and individuals suffer the bulk of the consequences.

The result is that pollution is harming those least responsible—and least equipped to combat its effects—more severely than those who are most to blame. In the United States, this is partially a result of systemic racism. Factories and power plants that emit toxic pollution have overwhelmingly been built near non-white and poor communities, which often lack adequate resources to resist powerful fossil fuel companies. The most famous example of this power imbalance is "Cancer Alley," a region of Louisiana where the predominantly Black residents face some of the worst air quality in the nation and suffer from chronic health issues as a result.

Global income data tracks closely with emissions data: The World Inequality Lab's 2022 report found that the wealthiest 10 percent earn 52 percent of all income, while the poorest half of all people earn just 8.5 percent. Why does wealth correlate so closely to emissions? On an individual level, people with more wealth are more likely to own cars, travel by airplane and own big homes that consume lots of energy.

The richest 1% of humanity produces 15% of total carbon emissions, while the richest 10% is responsible for more than half. Credit: Pexels.com.

Wealthy people are also more likely to invest in the stock market, a significant but harder to measure source of emissions: By giving a company money, investors tacitly greenlight the company's business practices. And because those investors expect a positive return on their investment, profitable companies tend to avoid potential risks like reorganizing their supply chain to be more environmentally friendly, since there might not be an immediate financial payoff for doing so.

Though corporations seem huge and impossible to change, individuals still have the power to influence them. If you invest in the stock market, you can ensure that the companies you put money into don't contribute to the oil industry or deforestation, and you can consider pulling your investments from those that do. The website Good with Money is a helpful place to start.

Still, the blame for greenhouse gas emissions falls squarely on the shoulders of corporations and governments, not individuals. While many companies have taken modest steps to reduce pollution, overall emissions are still increasing and will likely stay that way until the governments of major polluters like the U.S., China and the European Union force companies to transition away from fossil fuels. Until then, the wealth gap will continue to grow, and emissions inequality will grow along with it.

Humanity in Medicine

What does it mean to practice humanity in medicine? The phrase is used as a tagline and in book titles. Humanity and compassion in medicine is touted as something to aspire to, a noble accomplishment. But in reality, the biomedical model of health, the business model for healthcare, is not set up to support it. Algorithms and best practices set forth by insurance companies and Centers for Medicare and Medicaid do not account for the time required to establish meaningful human interaction between patient and caregiver.

This conundrum can be frustrating. Understanding the nuances of each individual patient and each situation cannot be rushed. Yet opting to practice 'slow medicine' can have negative ramifications; constantly running behind schedule, having more work than you can handle and knowing that there are more critical and needy patients waiting to be seen.

Thankfully, the benefits far outweigh the frustrations. Medical professionals who choose to share in the human condition with patients are better able to care for the whole person in a way that is nurturing and fulfilling to both parties. When we are successful in this effort to see our own fear and our own death and our own vulnerability in our patients, we will meet them and treat them with an open mind and open heart. We will listen actively, without bias or judgement and we will do what is best for them in this moment in their life.

Regardless of our profession, experiencing a sense of powerlessness can creep into us and lead to isolation and avoidance. We can lose connectedness with our own emotions and our own self. Striving to have an awareness and acceptance of grief, pain and knowing when to accept our inability to change circumstances can help us avoid feelings of helplessness.

Being a doctor helped create who I am as a person. I am grateful for all the patients who have enriched my life and taught me lessons of humility, joy, interconnectedness, and impermanence.

My patients and my experiences have indeed opened my mind and my heart. In my exam rooms, my patients and I collaborate in a communion of sorts. We share and connect as we learn about and better understand each other. That is what it means to practice humanity in medicine.

Perhaps these words by one of my favorite authors David Whyte say it best, "Put down the weight of your aloneness and ease into the conversation. Pay attention to everything in the world as if it is alive. Realize everything has its own discrete existence outside your story. By doing this, you open to the gifts and lessons the world has to give you."
